What drew you together?

The lockdown allowed Priyanka to get involved with my work and interact with the clients. The goal was to use our experience and exposure in design and make it more meaningful for a larger community, giving them access to good design from across the globe, from the comfort of their homes.

What are the challenges of being a real-life couple who work together?

Priyanka's approach towards clients and projects is very different, which helps us look at our work more holistically. Of course, there are logistical challenges, but our love for our work keeps us going.

How different are you from one another, and how does that help sync your work narratives?

We collaborate by combining our different approaches. I belong to an architectural background and see myself as an artist and a creator, and carry the responsibilities to deliver the best to our clients. On the other hand, Priyanka has a more business-like and practical approach. We try to collaborate by combining our different methods.

How has the synergy between you evolved over the years?

It has only been two years since we started working together, and we are still growing and learning every day. Through our teamwork, we have been able to generate better results.

What was your first project together?

We first collaborated on a show home in New Delhi for Orange and White developers. We did the furniture, interiors and styling.

What is the middle ground between you? How do you compromise and get the best of each other's vision for a project?

We make sure we go through all the details and deliver the best possible results. We do not compromise and tend to push our limits. Each of us has the energy that we bring to a project, which adds up, creating an exceptional result.

A dream project you will want to work on together.

We are working on a boutique hotel in the mountains. We can't wait!

A design destination you will love to visit as partners and a couple?

Our top two destinations on the world map are Central Africa and Cape Town. We have been sourcing some luxurious collectibles from all over Africa.
